STORY: Why Attend a WA Conference?

Having attended various types of conferences through my career, few have offered what a WA conference provides. Those other conferences have been for furthering my scientific pursuits and camaraderie with associates who I knew, but with whom there was little interaction except for a specific topic of interest. We seldom dealt with non-scientific topics such as everyday living. I was fully in my work addiction. Having attended the last two WA conferences was a real benefit to my recovery as now I was interacting with members who were sharing their experiences, strengths, and hopes. Although their backgrounds are in many different fields of study and from around the world, we are journeying on similar paths. In so doing, we are able to encourage one another in our recovery and see our Higher Powers act for our benefit.

So what is a conference like? Since they are small, typically sixty attendees, they are typically held in retreat centers providing quiet away from our busy schedules. Often we share sleeping quarters with someone we never knew because private rooms are few. We eat meals together which encourages conversation about ourselves and our experiences. The meetings are similar to our local WA meetings with a familiar format. Time is allotted for fun and play since that is so often lacking in our lives prior to recovery.

We also meet the members who give world-wide service that we may have literature and provide for the outreach to carry the message that recovery is possible for us. We learn of their struggles to do this volunteer work within their recovery journey. We hear how they apply the tools in their lives and practice the principles just like other members who are on the journey with us.

In all of this we practice the 12th Step of providing service to our fellow travelers whether we have worked this step or not. The member who comes to a meeting the first time is providing a service to us who may have been around for many years as we remember our beginnings and learn from them as they start their journey of recovery.

“Having ample time to panic” is a quote I attribute to Johnny Carson I overheard one night while listening to the Late Show during my “supper” meal, in between working on files, and before taking my night nap on my desk. It always stuck with me because I recognized “panic” as just the next higher elevation of anxiety that I spent my whole life at. It wasn’t until my awakening in WA that I didn’t find that funny anymore or keep it as my routine.

I still keep it close, now more as a remembrance and a tool to calm any desire I may think I have to raise my attitude level above that of reasonable focus at work – the thing I call my “B” or day job. In that regard, I now speak it humorously. So, there’s ample time to panic if you haven’t yet registered to come to the 2013 WA World Conference August 23-25. But registration, except through a special phone call, does close on August 1st.

We will be delighted to see everyone who comes. Each year is the cause for reflection on earlier ones I’ve been graced to attend. My first, I didn’t know what to expect. Being relatively new in the Program, and having only attended telephone meetings, I envisioned this huge WORLD convention with too many people to know and important leaders delivering dinner speeches. I didn’t know which things to pack, what to bring, or how to prepare. Naturally, I did it workaholically. Imagine my surprise when I found I could learn everyone’s name the first day, that no one wore dress-up clothes (I didn’t even wear a tie!), and it was just plain personal, heartwarming, and relaxed fun with some face-to-face WA meetings to go to.

We can go to conventions for business or as an association member of something, and sit around with seemingly like-minded people or those with similar interests and listen to speeches from important people; but here we get to hang out with like-feeling people with similar recoveries and share our experiences, strengths and hopes. It’s like being a kid at sleep away camp with your closest friends.

I’ve been at WA conferences as a service Board member, too; and while there are some items of actual business required at a conference, we as a Board have intended to minimize the time spent necessarily in those meetings in order to listen to the real important people there – those we serve, who is everyone who comes and everyone represented by their representatives who attend.

The invitation is open and extended. Welcome. There is ample time to register and we hope you will; and that we will see you there.

Bruce A., Facilitator
STORY: Why am I here?

Sitting across the room, my empty bag begs, “Time to pack!” I know, I know…I need no reminder. I just need time. What was I thinking signing up for this conference. I can’t leave now, not with everything going on this week. Packing? Just thinking about it makes me anxious, but why? I remember, around the age of seven, loading up my miniature suitcase days before going on trips. My imagination took me to places in my mind that filled me with excitement as I packed for journeys ahead. Then, trips were vacations—now what are they? Interruptions.

“Excuse me, do you have a pen.”

Sure.” I handed over my pen hoping that it would occupy the chatterbox sitting next to me. I was in no mood for conversation, just wanting things to be quiet.

“So where are you off to?” she asked, while filling numbers into her Sudoku book.

“I’m going to a conference.”

“Ah, hard at work. Good for you.”

“Yeah.” So, about the quiet I was hoping for? Lost cause.

“You know, you should try one of these puzzles. They’re a nice break when you need one. And fun too.”

“No no, I’m fine. I’ve got plenty here to do in this stack.” Angling myself closer towards the window, I hoped she would take a hint—no more talking!

“What kind of conference is it?”

“Well in that case, here’s a puzzle. Take it. Trust me, you’ll need it.” The woman ripped a page from her book and handed it over.

“Thanks.” Well, good, if I’m ever looking for a way to waste my time, I’m now prepared.

Knowing no one here from the start terrifies me. Why did I think this conference was a good idea? Why did I fly across the country to end up here? What now? Questions raced through my mind with no oasis to find answers. I have a way of second-guessing things—it’s like my other full time job, the one that usually keeps me from making ludicrous decisions like heading out to some random conference for workaholics. How did I let this crazy idea enter my mind without questioning it twice?

Walking into the dining hall in the morning, I saw a table of people gathered around talking and laughing. The rest of the room was empty. I guess all of those other workaholics used their better judgment—thought twice—and stayed home. My mind was searching for every excuse to dart out of the room and make my way to the nearest exit.

“Come sit down.”

Ah, I’ve been spotted. Now what?

“There’s some fruit and coffee behind you. Grab something and join us.”

Escape was no longer an option. I grabbed a banana and walked towards the table. After brief introductions, personal stories were shared.

“Now, tell us about you. What brings you here?”

“I…uh…I’m interested in workaholism. I’m studying it actually. So yeah, I’m here to learn about workaholism.” True story. Well, at least, part of the true story.

“What do you know about workaholism?”

Simple question, right? Why didn’t I have an answer? My interest in workaholism began as a research topic for my dissertation. But in the course of learning about it, my mind was reading more than books. I was reading my life all the while realizing that my study was telling a story about me. I knew about workaholism because…I lived it. Or did I?

“I’m learning a lot about it still. I see it in our culture everywhere. It’s a serious problem.”

“You’ll certainly learn more about it here. Why don’t you join us for our morning meeting? It’s about to start in ten minutes.”

“Sure.” I was all for getting down to business. Bring on the meetings!

As the table cleared, one of the members stayed seated. I was getting up from my chair, when he said, “This experience, being a workaholic, it’s hard. I come to these conferences and am reminded of how much I need to be here. I’m really glad that you’re here too.”

“Thank you.”

“And I hope that while you’re here you learn what you came for. We just appreciate you showing up. There are a lot of other places you could be right now. But you chose to be here—that means more than you may know.”

I paused for a moment. We appreciate you. I wasn’t told that often, or perhaps I hadn’t been paying attention. But in that moment, I listened. I felt appreciated for simply being there.

“A lot of things can be discovered at this conference. Most meaningful are the people. They help me feel more like myself. There’s a lot to us—you, me, others. We’re all here to learn about who are, which for many of us we never had a chance to know before.”

Moments. How do they find us when we least expect? How do they grip time suddenly, making it stop moving so fast? There were probably several valuable moments leading me up to the conference that I dodged, intentionally, to avoid getting caught up in them. But in this particular moment, I didn’t feel caught. I felt...found. I was here because I had lost touch with myself everywhere else.

While sitting on the plane ride home, I rummaged through my bag looking for a pen. A small piece of paper flew out and landed beneath my seat. Reaching to pick it up, I saw that it was the Sudoku puzzle given to me just a few days ago. It reminded me of the angst I felt over packing my bag, the grumpiness I exuded on the plane, and the second-guessing that plagued me when first arriving at the conference. My workaholism, and the dismissive mood that comes with it, often blinded me from seeing the value given by so many moments. The conference offered me distance away from my routine life to journey closer to understanding the person I am and all that there is in life to appreciate. This understanding was made possible through fellowship, as everyone’s presence mattered for creating a communal sense of belonging. The conference is not for one, but for all. The presence of togetherness speaks profoundly to answer the question “why am I here?” I need others just as they need me—this is how we begin to belong and find ourselves in becoming who we are.

STORY: Recovery Recharge

Every year I look forward to the W.A. World Conference. I have had the great fortune to have been to New Jersey, North Carolina, Oregon, California, Texas and now the upcoming Chicago one this August.

I absolutely love the rich mixture of people; all ages, races, sexes from the U.S. and aboard. Each year I meet new friends, get to visit with old ones and enrich my recovery throughout the year in cultivating these relationships.

Each conference is always a positive experience. I take away different things each time, depending on where I am in my own recovery. I love the attention to balance in the conference scheduling; the activities, meetings, play time (always a lot of laughter), down time, etc... The underlying theme at every conference is self-nurturing and self-care exhibited in various forms (meetings, workshops, meditation, sponsorship, etc...), and just learning to enjoy life more. A good deal of thought and planning goes into these conferences, and I will want to thank all of the conference committees for their work.

My biggest thrill? Seeing the newcomers light up at the conference. Many times this is their very first face-to-face meeting.

I can’t wait for Chicago in August, and am looking forward to taking folks for a bike ride by the lake, one of my old stomping grounds!!
